Breaking into a website now costs $50

One operator, 1,200 sites, $5,000 in tokens

THE PROBLEM

- "we'll patch it next sprint" is not a plan
- recon is no longer done by a tired human
- targets are swept in batches, not one by one
- Deere, SharkNinja and Cummins made the list

HOW IT RAN

- started Sept 25, over 1,200 sites probed
- orchestrated on open-source Cairn
- agents found and tested the holes themselves
- mostly shops in US, Canada, Australia, Japan

THE ECONOMICS

$50

per successful breach

~$5 per task · ~10% success · ~23 hours each

THE HUMAN PART

The operator wrote fewer than one hundred characters of instructions

Found by accident: he left his dashboard exposed

TAKEAWAY

Defense is counted in human hours, attack in tokens. The gap is not yours
